The repertoire of music for percussion ensemble has grown enormously over the past century, as composers explored a field of sound colours that had previously been relegated to a subordinate role in the back row of an orchestra. From Steve Reich’s Minimalism, meditative rhythmic patterns to complex encounters between percussion and electronics, Speak Percussion, in this performance, fills the MRC with the exhilarating sounds of American percussion masters.

John Cage was one of America’s most innovating composers, philosophers and writers of the last century. He was a pioneer of chance music, electronic music and prepared instrument music. Through his close association with Merce Cunningham he was also an innovator of modern dance. His study of Indian philosophy and Zen Buddhism in the late 1940s led to the development of chance-controlled music. Quartet for any four percussion instruments is an early composition created during a period of study with the great Arnold Schoenberg.

Elliott Carter celebrated his 100th birthday last year. A distinguished career as an academic has seen him in teaching positions at Peabody Conservatory, Columbia University, Yale University, Cornell University and The Juilliard School in subjects as far ranging as physics, mathematics, Classical Greek, as well as music! Tintinabulation is one of a number of compositions composed in his 100th year.

James Tenney is remembered as both an influential composer and music theorist. The majority of Tenney’s mature works are instrumental pieces for unconventional instrumental combinations or for variable instrumentation. Pikadon was written in response the horrific WWII bombing of Hiroshima; the atomic bomb detonation being described both those it targeted as a brilliant light ‘pika’ followed by a thunderous blast, ‘don’.

Johanna Beyer was born in Leipzig and migrated to the USA in 1923. Perhaps Beyer’s most important contribution to the development of new music is her repertoire for percussion ensemble; her March for 30 Percussion Instruments has been described as the ‘most gorgeous orchestrations for percussion ensemble ever composed’. All of her percussion music is distinguished for its sense of humour and ‘emphasis on process over more purely rhythmic exploration’. Alvin Lucier is an American composer of experimental music and sound installations. Much of his work is influenced by science and explores the physical properties of sound; Lucier was a member of the influential Sonic Arts Union performing and touring together for a decade from the late 1960s. One of Lucier’s most important compositions is I am Sitting in a Room [1970] in which the composer records himself narrating a text and then plays the recording back into the room, re-recording it. Steve Reich’s Clapping Music is a work of purest Minimalism phasing a static rhythm between two performers note by note until a final unison is reached.
